He found Dempsey much more skilful as a boxer than he had anelemated, and faster than he had been sed to believe by accounts of some of Dempsey's battles. He says that the advantage in speed and skill was e than offset by Dempsey's overwhelming strength and the champion's ability to recuperate quickly when dased and in danger of a

Carpentier is one of the fastest and nest effective fighting men of his weight I've ever seen-and I've them all during the past

There are many good light heavy reights. The class should be exremely popular, and it will be with Harry Greb contending for the title. As fc: matching Dempsey against s or any other lighter heavy might, there's little sense in it. Carther did everything that a smaller u could do to Dempsey. Aside from his personal character-ustics outside the ring. Dempsey is a credit to this country as a champion. The English and French sportsmen

The English and French sportsmen who came here to see him box Carpentier all thought the Frenchman would surely knock Dempsey out within three rounds. Many of them borrowed money to go home. But they went back with a much higher opinion of the kind of fighting men developed in America.

What they saw was a powerful fellow in fine physical condition with skill and speed and a determination to win that nothing could shake.

The last thing Carpentier said to me before he left Manhasset was: "I have been very well treated in this country. The man who beat me is a fair, clean boxer. He won because he is a better fighter. We are good friends. I shall have much to tell my friends in France of good sportsmanship in America." ship in America.
